WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

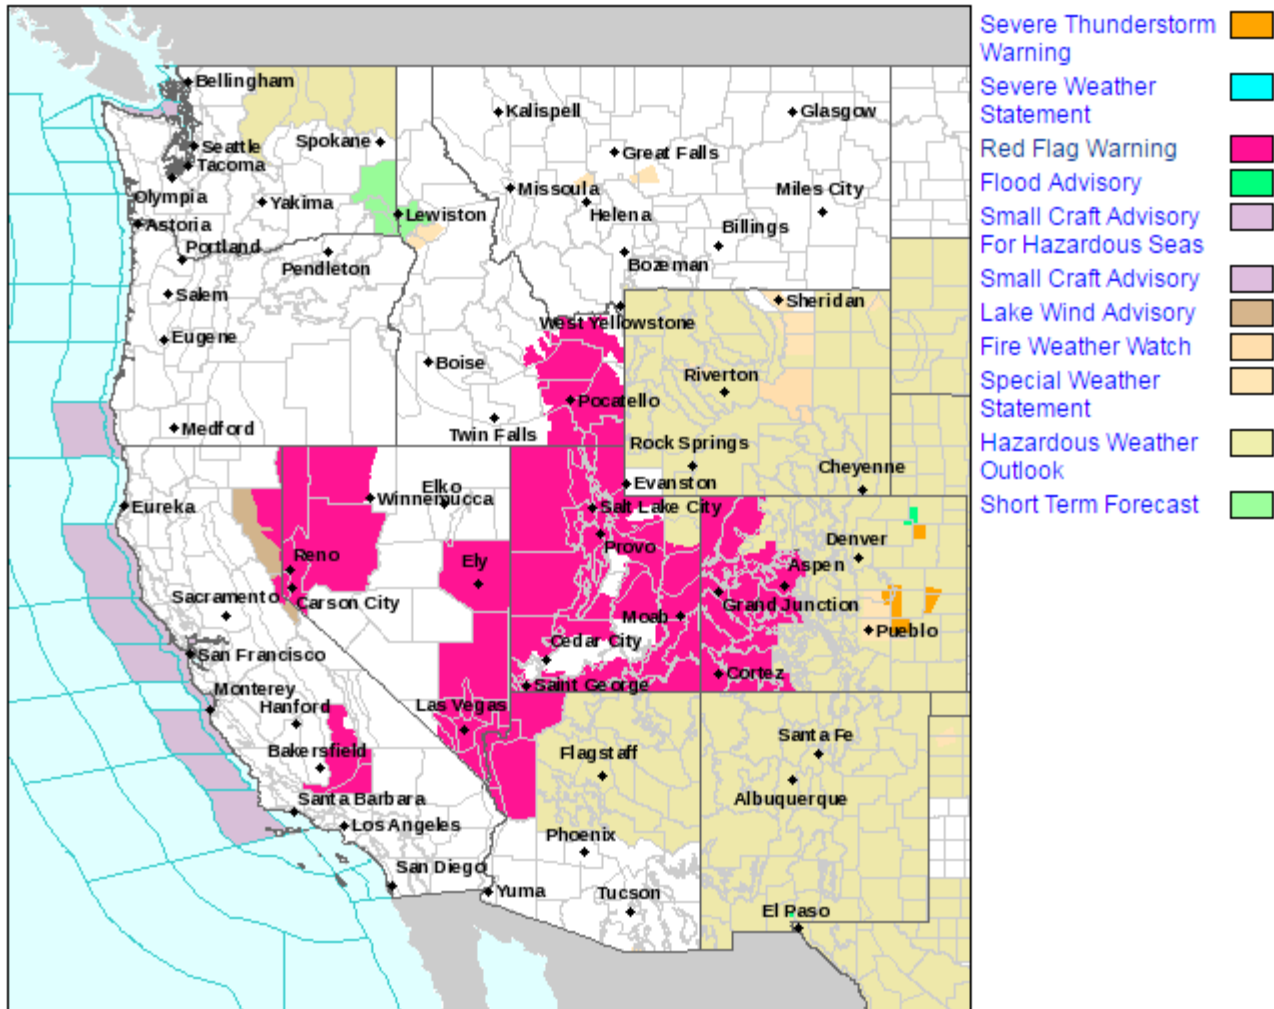

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Low pressure over the Pacific Northwest will open up and become a southwest-northeast aligned trough on Tuesday, then finally move inland on Friday. Strong high pressure will remain stationary over the Southern Plains during this time. This pattern will produce a moderate to strong southwest flow over Northern California, and through Tuesday the low pressure will have more influence on our weather. There is a slight chance of afternoon showers or thunderstorms across the far northern areas late today through Monday, and a slight chance of light showers in far northwest areas Tuesday through Thursday. Any thunderstorms or showers that develop will produce light rainfall, but any lightning that occurs could still be a mix of wet and dry. Southwesterly winds from the higher terrain of the Sierra (5000'+) and east into northwest Nevada will gust to 30-40 mph each afternoon through Tuesday. The minimum afternoon RH in those areas will be 8-18%. Temperatures will be 5-10 degrees below normal Sunday through Tuesday. The trough will weaken Wednesday and Thursday and temperatures will warm up to near normal, but the trough will still be deep enough to produce gusty winds over the higher terrain each afternoon. The trough is expected to move east across Northern California Friday with no precipitation chances. A more rapid warming and drying trend is expected beginning next weekend.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Strong winds developed overnight in the Southern Sierras and the Kern County Mountains in the wake of the trough which passed to our north yesterday. Wind speeds are currently in 20-30 mph in this area, and winds will likely strengthen and expand into areas in and near the Antelope Valley by afternoon. Some gusts to 45 mph will be possible from areas south and east of Sequoia N.P. to highway 58. Minimum RH will fall into the single digits in this area during the afternoon. The rest of the area will be sunny, breezy and cooler. Highs will range from the 70s at the coast to the upper 80s to lower 90s in the valleys to 108 in the deserts. Minimum RH will be in the teens over most areas away from the coast. Monday, winds will decrease over the Kern County Mountains. Expansive high pressure over the Southern Rockies will shift further west this week, leading to a warming trend. Highs will climb each day from Tuesday through the end of the week and valley highs will be over 100 by Wednesday or Thursday. Marine layer coverage will be minimal, therefore hot temperatures and low RH will be possible all the way to the coast. A minor amount of moisture may lead to isolated storms over the far eastern desert during the middle of the week, but the rest of the area will be sunny and dry. The hot, dry and sunny weather will last into next weekend, and quite possibly, the end of the month
